

STEPUPP

University Preparation for Parents

Why choose university?

Your child wants to attend university but you're not sure where to start, or even if it's the right choice.

You're not alone. Many parents who have not attended university themselves or who come from another country with a different educational system, are often unsure of how to help their children set their higher educational goals.

We are here to help. Introducing STEPUPP – University Preparation for Parents.

Together, parents and their children take part in seminars, workshops and mentoring sessions to better understand the higher education environment.

The program will highlight three key areas:

- The value of a post-secondary education, including information about colleges, universities and apprenticeships.
- How to finance post-secondary education.
- What it takes to be a successful student in college or university and the key roles played by parents and family.

The STEPUPP program is modelled after U of T Mississauga's successful stepONE program – Student Transition Education Program ONE. Since its launch in 2006, stepONE has helped hundreds of students successfully make the transition to university.

STEPUPP is funded by the Government of Ontario and operated by the University of Toronto Mississauga.
